

Proofreading and writing help for students, academics, creatives and charities from published author and former writing fellow at The Courtauld Institute of Art, Virginia Rounding

“Proofreading Plus” from author & writing consultant, Virginia Rounding

“Proofreading Plus” costs less than full editing, but offers more than mere proofreading. As such, it is ideal for students and others who need to take responsibility for their own writing but could use the benefit of some expert guidance and constructive feedback.

“Proofreading Plus” is a remote service (that is, material will be delivered, read and marked up electronically). Errors of grammar, punctuation, spelling etc. will be corrected and, if appropriate and requested, comments made on some of the larger issues—style, argument, structure etc. I will not ‘fix’ these things for you, but will make helpful suggestions and point out where you need to do more work. I will use ‘track changes’ so that you can see where I have made alterations, and accept or reject them.

I work particularly with students (especially at Masters and PhD level) as well as with post-doctoral academics, museum and art curators, start-ups and charities. Though some of my clients are native English speakers, the majority of them have another language as their mother tongue, including Italian, Russian, Hebrew, Spanish, Portuguese, Japanese, German, Greek and Arabic. Subjects I have dealt with recently range from military painting during the French Second Empire, through the National Plan of Public Works in Bogotá, to palliative care for non-cancer patients in Japan, and the psychology of professional body-builders.

I operate a scale of fees, depending on the sector, but aim always to keep them reasonable and affordable. (Fees for students are downloadable from: <http://virginiarounding.wordpress.com/hoxton-writing-consultancy/proofreading-plus/>.)
